Summer Boredom Buster Jar

I don't know about you, but about 15 minutes into the first day of summer, I begin to hear, "I'm bored!" Yes, even at my house, I hear it from the grandkids from time to time. . .especially if they are here when I'm working.

To handle the occasional lapse in ideas, I have re-created some jars like the ones that I had when my kids were little. I call them Summer Boredom Buster jars. They really come in handy when you're babysitting or having the grandkids over for an afternoon.

Here are some suggestions for how to create something easily, inexpensively, and quickly:

- Write down some activities or things to do on pieces of paper and put them in a box or jar. Have the kids choose one out when they are bored.
- Write your activities on craft sticks and put them in a jar. (*I like to color-code mine for Indoor vs. Outdoor activities.) Again, just have the kids pull out a stick.
- You can write several activities on a blow-up beach ball. When you need an activity, throw the ball to your grandchild and whatever activity is closest to their right thumb (or whatever finger you choose) is what activity they can do.
- You can put several ideas on a laminated sheet of paper and hang it on the refrigerator. Then, let the kids throw rubber darts at the paper to choose what activity they will do next.
- You can use a large spinner (like from a Twister game) and cover the board with a large piece of paper and write activities on it. The kids can then spin the spinner to decide.

*I use one kind of Washi tape to mark outdoor activities and another one for indoor. You can use different colored sticks, you can color or paint the sticks yourself, or get creative and come up with something better.

Even if you already have fun ideas, it's much more fun to have a jar, box, or whatever to grab activity ideas from. The kids will love it!

Lil' Monster Workout

This is a great way to get the grandkids moving whether they are inside or outside. The idea is simple. Have the kids spell out words by doing the exercise associated with each letter.

You can start with their name. Then, make a game out of it by having a Workout Bee (a.k.a. a spelling bee). You may even want to suggest they use this list to practice their spelling words when school begins again.

Backyard Scavenger Hunt

Again, this one is pretty simple. Give each child a scavenger hunt sheet. Young ones will need help reading the words, but they can find the objects on their own.

There are words on the sheet that describe something that can be found outside. Just have the kids find something and tell you what it is and circle the word on their sheet. Easy peasy!

The beauty of this type of scavenger hunt is that it may never be the same twice. Because of that, you may just want to print the sheets and laminate them. Then the kids can use a crayon or dry erase marker to circle the words.

*Printables are on the next 2 pages.
